Publishing of the grain storage capacity per registered delivery point

The JSE has always traditionally published the storage capacity of each delivery point together with the registration process in order for the market to be able to understand the capacity of the registered site. Following a suggestion from the market the JSE is pleased to provide a consolidated list of all storage capacities in tons at each of the registered delivery points in the country together with the road distances to the registered reference points, either Randfontein or Paarl. This information will form part of the location differential spreadsheets available on the web page as per this link:

The JSE would like to thank all registered Silo Owners who responded so efficiently to ensure our records are accurate. Thanks to the Silo Owners participation in the market the JSE is able to recognize just over 15 million tons of available storage capacity. The storage capacities as published include where applicable, flexible storage options like bunkers or silo bags that have been added to the traditional fixed storage bins in order to disclose the maximum possible capacity at each registered delivery point.

We recognize and appreciate that storage capacities may change over time and any updates would be reflected directly on the web page without a formal market notice being distributed as and when received from the registered Silo Owner. This information will be included in the location differential spreadsheets published each year of which the most recent is attached to this market notice.

If there are any further questions regarding this process please feel free to contact the Commodities Team.
